

India is no longer an independent nation-state

Soumadeep Ghosh

Kolkata, India

Abstract

In this paper, I describe why and how India is no longer an independent nation-state.

The paper ends with "The End"

Introduction

Today, India is a nation-state where both knowledge and propaganda abound, the latter much more than the former.

Moreover, the self-styled Prime Minister of India, Narendra Damodardas Modi, has pretty much run the Indian economy into the ground with his bizarre speeches and hollow statements with no follow-up action.

Moreover, Narendra Damodardas Modi is seen as little more than a fool abroad, where true international power lies.

As a result, power in India has now become decentralized.

However, this decentralization is not the right type of decentralization, as seen, for example, in Europe.

Instead, today India resembles a hodgepodge of states, many with their own local ruling government and party, each of which is vying to take out their nearest neighbour.

Narendra Damodardas Modi's roadshows

The so-called Hindi heart-belt is in complete denial of the reduced status of their leaders Narendra Damodardas Modi and Yogi Adityanath, and therefore of their true status in the world.

What should one say about a so-called Prime Minister who holds roadshows in every state that doesn't have a BJP presence, like a newbie politician?

Do the existing leaders of those states not wonder, "Is Narendra Damodardas Modi going to get me kicked off my throne?"

How can the center hold against such political paranoia prevalent in the states?

Is it not only a matter of time till somebody loses their cool and a political incident occurs?

The political center has already broken

The truth is that the political center has already broken and India has regressed to post-modern proto-feudalism in a post-truth, low-trust society.

The ramification of these changes

The ramification of these changes is immense - India is no longer an independent nation-state.

Voyages and expeditions from abroad are already on the way, to re-colonize the Indian subcontinent.

The only difference is that this time around the Indians states have no strong and trusted leader whom to rally their collective national strength around.

The present symptoms of the dangers ahead

1. A large number of Indians have already given up their Indian citizenship to find greener pastures, a phenomenon hitherto unheard of in Indian history.
2. The Indian judiciary is at a loss at what to do about treasonous politician-turned-mass-murderers like Narendra Damodardas Modi.
3. The failed Prime Minister Narendra Damodardas Modi seems to be in denial of his so-called accomplishments and goes off on tangents mid-speech in what can only be described as confusion and beggary for yet another so-called "opportunity to change India".

Conclusion

Therefore, we conclude that India is no longer an independent nation-state, and what lies ahead in the future for India is indeed worrisome.

The End